RESPONSIVENESS

We need to consider how our site is going to adapt to different screen sizes.

We can utilize flex or grid layouts, or a combination.

Semantic tags can increase accessibility requirements, and also assist with our planning and design.

```
<header> <main> <footer>
<section> <figure> <img>
Minimum use of  and
```

These are also an important part of maintaining and managing our components.

MORE ON COMPONENTS

Our design will need to incorporate multiple components.

For instance, text heavy content may require heading tags `<h1>` `<h2>` and paragraph `` elements that can be wrapped in a container such as `<section>` or `<article>`.

For styling purposes, we may use non-semantic elements, such as `` or, only where other elements are not appropriate, the `` container.

Images can be sourced in `<img>` tags which in itself can be wrapped in `<figure>` tags, that may then also be found within a greater envelope such as `<section>`

ACCESSIBILITY THROUGH COLOUR

Colour choice needs to match our theme to create consistency throughout the site.

It should represent the ideas that we are trying to convey. Is it serious ? Is it fun ?

It should also meet visibility accessibility. For instance, can the text be read against the background ?

It's just not that "black-and-white" (yep, I just did that)

ACCESSIBILITY THROUGH FONT

Font needs to be accessible through readability

Is it the right size ?

Is it legible through color contrast ?

We might consider serif type for longer paragraphs and sans serif for headings / menus / shorter paragraphs

We may utilize stylish fonts, but keep this for impactful statements or headings only

WIREFRAMES

WHY ARE THESE IMPORTANT ?

Mostly, because Glen said they are !

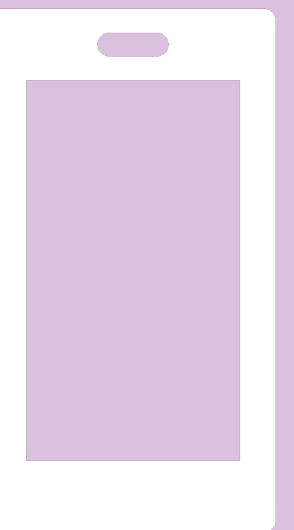

Creates an easily modified space to test layouts, and then forms a guide during the project.

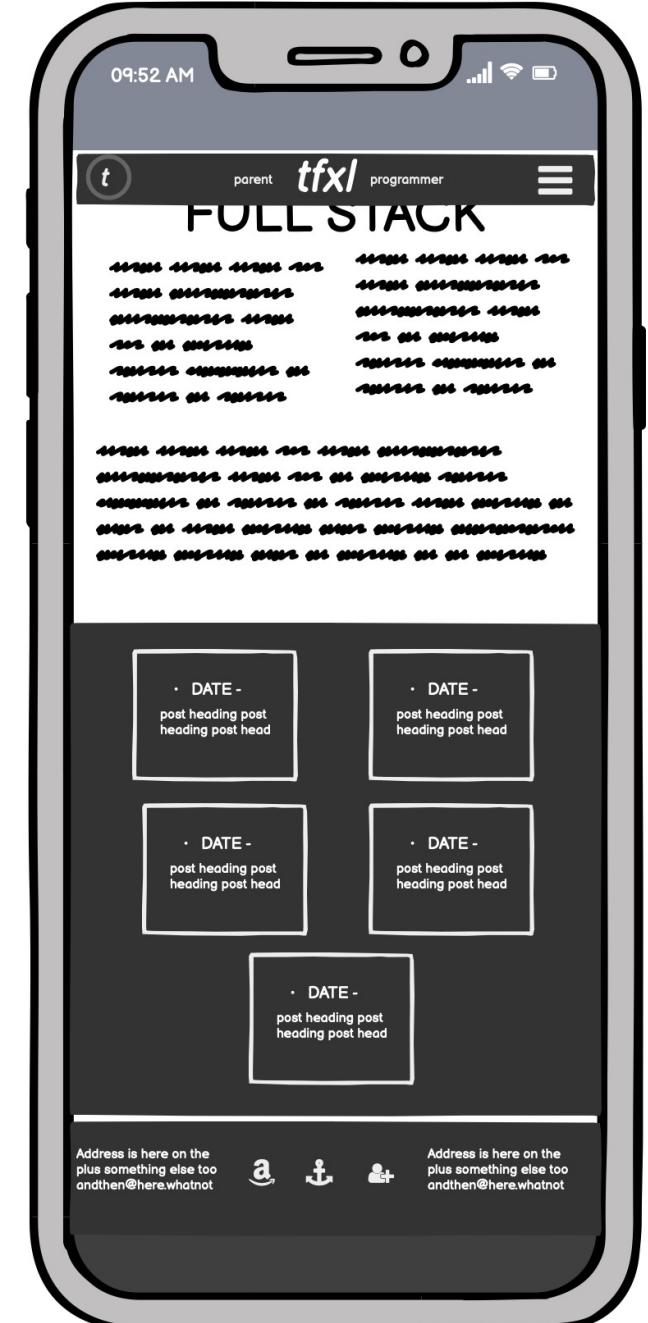

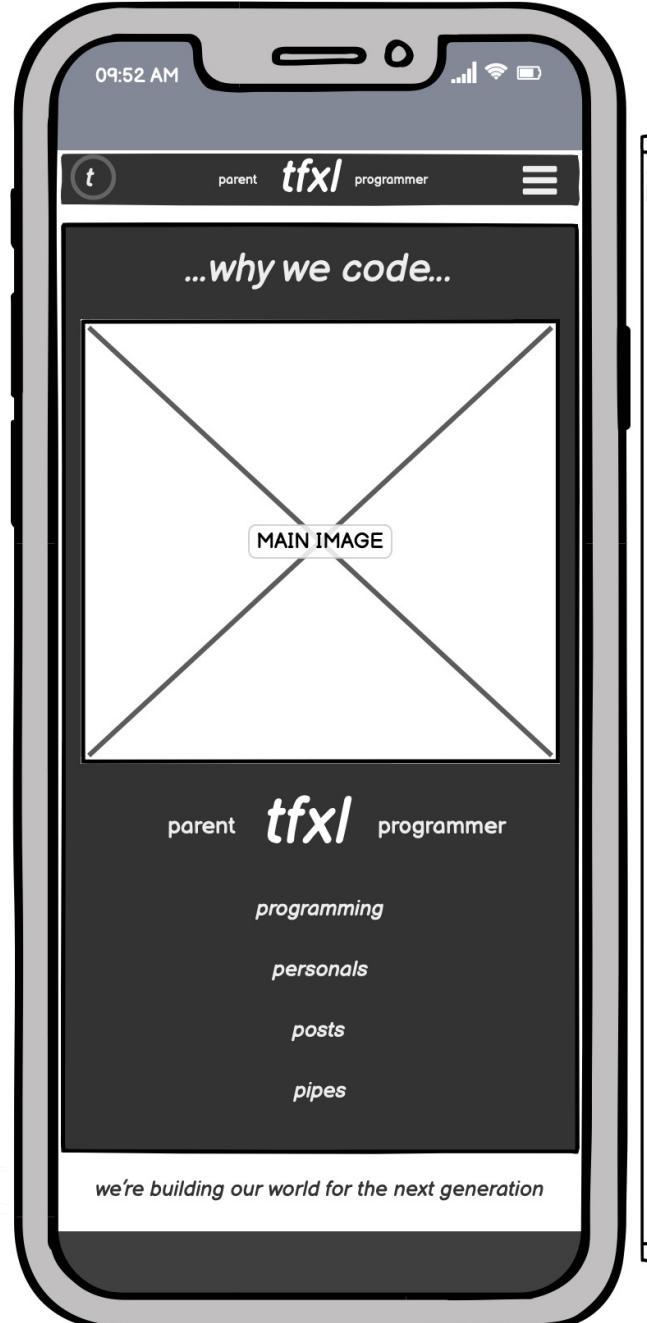

Also provides an opportunity to further develop additional design ideas while constructing.

Important for client communication and team collaboration.

Plus they're super fun.

LET'S TALK ABOUT THE PHONES

This is primarily a black and white design. Sections are controlled through alternating backgrounds and text.

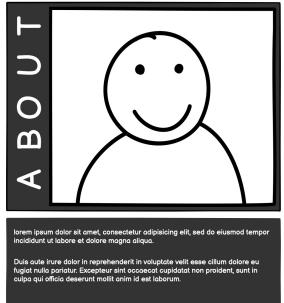

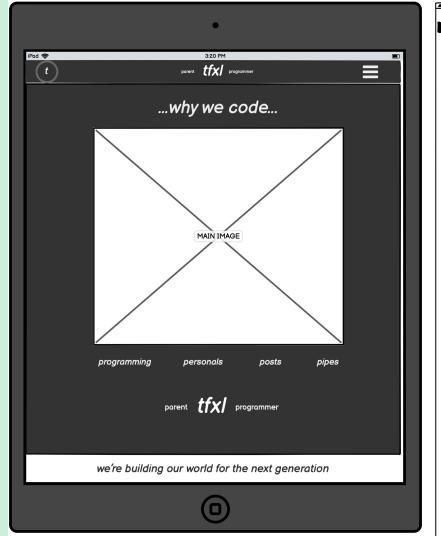

It allows for a text-heavy theme, which also means that the writing has to be engaging.

Once committed to this style, it is more difficult to add colour without changing the theme. Greyscale images work well, and other colours can be used as highlights.

We will see a similar outlay on the tablet

NOW FOR THE IMPORTANT STUFF (BLOGS / POSTS)

These will be text-only on the mobile and tablet.

The user has a high expectation to see text-heavy content, and in this case the image use will be minimal, as the focus is on written content for entertainment.

Design will keep a fixed picture on the desktop version and allow the user to scroll through the post on the side. As we have the real-estate, we can use it.

It's also a good opportunity to put another photo of me on the screen 😊
